A Most Disastrous Storm Sweeps over Baltimore, Pittsburg and New York City.

A Sister of the Late Governor Seymour Whirled from a Train by the Gale.

A BLIZZARD

Strikes New York and Is Likely to Prove Disastrous.

By Telegraph to THE SENTINEL:

New York, Feb. 26.—A western blizzard has reached New York. The mercury has fallen over twenty degrees in the past few hours, and the streets that were deluged with rain yesterday are covered with ice to-day. The wind is blowing a gale, and it is feared it will prove disastrous.

Travel on the elevated roads is greatly delayed. Signal service officers say the storm in point of velocity was the severest in fifteen years.

BUFFALO, Feb. 26.—One of the heaviest gales of the season set in last night and continued to-day. The wind reached a velocity of fifty-seven miles an hour. At 10 o'clock it moderated to forty an hour. The temperature is 4 degrees above zero. About 9 o'clock last night, while the wind was blowing a strong gale, a lady said to be a sister of the late Ex-governor Seymour, was blown from a Lake Shore train between Erie & Dunkirk. She attempted to pass from the dining car to the sleeper with her husband. No sooner had she stepped upon the platform than she was carried swiftly off of the train. The train backed nearly a mile before they found the lady who had escaped death, but received a deep gash over the left temple.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 26.—After a fearful rain-storm last night, Baltimore and vicinity was visited by a hurricane far severer than for several years. In the northwestern part of the city houses were unroofed, and in several instances not only tin was blown from the roofs, but sheathing was torn off and hurled entirely across the streets. The damage will be considerable. To-day the wind is still very high, with frequent gusts of snow.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 26.—The wind storm last night in the eastern part of this state blew down telegraph lines, and communication is almost entirely interrupted. The gale continued all night and was accompanied by a slight fall of snow. Within twenty-four hours the mercury fell 43 degrees.

McCormick announced this afternoon that as a result of his conference with a committee of his late workmen, the lookout ends and the works will be started in a few days.

The men fought desperately, but at the end of the sixth round the fight was declared a draw.

TILDEN AT HOME.

His Palatial City and Country Residences.

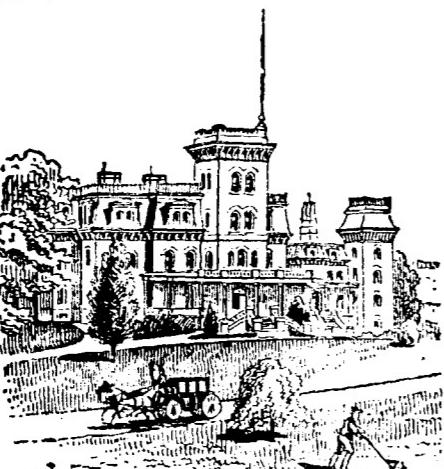

Greystone, the Country Seat in Which He Now Lives—His House at Gramercy Park, the Former Mecca for Politicians—Tilden's Tastes and Studies.

Special Correspondence.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—If the political history of the past quarter of a century could be faithfully and impartially written, if due credit were given to those who have been leaders of public thought guides of public opinion, it would be found that the "Sage of Greystone," the quiet and unostentatious Samuel J. Tilden, though a frail little man, has been a giant among the movers of men and events. But an acknowledgment of his public services cannot be made in his day nor likely in his generation, if they are ever made. The partisanship of his political opponents and the jealousy of members of his own party will prevent it.

These are thoughts that would occur to an unprejudiced observer after visiting Greystone and seeing Mr. Tilden among his charts and books and studies.

such a remarkable way, the faculty of grasping, analyzing and retaining all they read. I took a hasty glance at the numerous books which were conveniently arranged on his study table. They all appeared to be either the memoirs of statesmen or pertained to statesmanship or economic subjects in some way. At every turn in the house are cases of books, each devoted to some special subject. Through the services of his amanuensis and two valets he is enabled to bring to hand immediately any work he desires to refer to. Often he will send a special messenger to his city house in Gramercy park for a book to assist him in his investigations. Like the great general he is, he has a room devoted to topography, where maps and charts of the whole world are kept for reference. The house throughout is furnished with every convenience that excellent taste could suggest, from a steam engine in the cellar to the powerful telescope in the upper chamber of the tower. The northern wing of the building is devoted, with the exception of a spacious billiard room, to the dozen servants and the culinary department. The walls of the house are hung with works of art of the choicest kind, prominent among which are excellent reproductions of the treasures of the American. Above the parlor, music and reception rooms at the south end of the building are Mr. Tilden's apartments. The remainder of the house has accommodations for probably twenty-five guests. The house and grounds are constantly open to visitors. His guests number many of the most prominent public men of the country.

This is the house that was the Mecca for politicians until a few years ago. Here campaigns were planned, lines of policy discussed, and reconciliations between rival candidates and organizations effected. The house has recently been rebuilt. It is fitted out even more sumptuously than Greystone. Here is Mr. Tilden's great law library. It, together with his other books occupy five large rooms in an absolutely fireproof portion of the building. While Mr. Tilden lives these houses shall continue to be the resort for the leaders of the party whose

Mr. Tilden's country home at Greystone is situated on the east bank of the Hudson, about eighteen miles from the New York city hall, and is one of the first among the beautiful homes of America. It was built by John T. Waring, a Massachusetts hat manufacturer, who made his money, it is said, by using convict labor. The building and farm of about 100 acres cost him $400,000. Mr. Tilden bought it in 1870 and has since been constantly at work improving it. Every day that is not stormy he can be seen inspecting the various portions of his "farm" as he calls it, and it is a farm and an exceedingly well regulated one, the stock being the very best procurable. The greenhouses and grapevines, erected during this year, are at present taking much of Mr. Tilden's attention. He purposes to rival Mr. Gould in his collection of plants, and his fruit houses are designed to supply grapes and peaches all the year round. But it is the interior of the house that interests one most, particularly at this season. I can never forget an incident of my first visit to Greystone. It was in the fall of '83. My guide through the house on that occasion was Mr. Andrew H. Green, the ex-comptroller of New York city, who resides with Mr. Tilden. A telegram caused Mr. Green to excise himself from me for a time while I enjoyed the works of art and magnificent old clocks in the spacious hall which runs through the building from east to west. Being attracted to the farthest end of the hall, I passed Mr. Tilden's study just as the door opened, when I saw a picture that startled me. It was Mr. Tilden as an invalid, with a napkin pinned over his chest, and his niece, Miss Pelton, sitting him with his food, for the carrying of which his hands were too weak. This was at a time when papers throughout the country were calling on him to again be a candidate for the presidency. I thought of how few could understand that his feeble body carried one of the brightest intellects of our time, and what a subject it would have made for the caricaturist, so I refrained from telling of it until now, when Mr. Tilden's condition is better known. Mr. Tilden has been for years almost deprived of the use of his hands. The relaxation of the vocal chords will not permit him to speak above a whisper, and at times scarcely that. Otherwise his condition is very good for one who has just passed his 72nd birthday.

GREYSTONE.

But up and down goes a horse, walking, or rather dancing, upon its hind legs; the biddings go on; a knowing-looking dealer plunges under the rails and makes a hasty survey of the animal's mouth in spite of its evident objection to the process. To the outside spectator there is always a degree of mystery about the auctioneer. How does he pick up the bids that are conveyed by a wink, perhaps, or an imperceptible movement of the chin—by some sign, anyhow, which the keenest attention of the observer fails to detect? But young Mr. Richard Tattersall seems to take to it all as naturally as possible. The greatest of the auctioneers rarely indulge in eloquence. A country practitioner will expend as much fire about an old frying-pan as Tattersall would about a 2,000-guinea yearling; but there is a manner that is more eloquent than words, and there is a kind of generalship in the business that comes out on great occasions. But here everything is sharp and decisive; the hammer comes down sharply upon the last bid. "Another turn," to the groom, who hangs on to the halter and ties up and down the track, while bystanders recede gracefully from the horse's head. "A hundred and fifty-fifty-five—to be sold; and sixty against you—sixty-five any advance—going." Bang! And, by this time, another animal is prancing along towards the rostrum, when the process of extracting the last bid and knocking down, metaphorically, the horse, is gone through with the same expedition. Meantime, from the gallery above, the number of the lots has been shown on a large placard, dealers mark off the piece with stubby pencils, and amateurs criticize the appearance and action of the animal under the hammer. And thus the sale goes on hour after hour, and before nightfall some 15,000 or 20,000 pounds worth of horseflesh will have changed owners, and to-morrow they will march away in strings to their new quarters—some back to the shires, to summer pastures and lightsome frolics, others to carry youth and beauty in the parks, others again as coach horses to trundle stately old dowagers hither and thither, while here and there one—a good fencer and fast—having seen its best days, will be consigned to the shafts of a hansom, and so ends its career upon the arid stones of this London wilderness.—All the Year Round.

By Telegraph to THE SENTINEL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26.—Mr. Mitchell addressed the senate on the bill recently introduced by him to provide for the abrogation of all treaties permitting the immigration of Chinese into the United States.

Mr. Morrison, from the committee on rules, reported a substitute for Messrs. Hanback and Pulitzer's resolutions directing inquiry into the Pan-Electric telephone matter. It provides for a select committee to make inquiry into any expenditure on the part of the government incurred relative to the rights of the Bell and Pan-Electric telephone companies to property of their patents to include all organizations and companies that have sprung out of the Pan-Electric telephone company, and also make full inquiry as to the issuance of stock known as the Pan-Electric telephone stock, or any stock of any other company, companies or organizations springing out of the Pan-Electric Telephone company to any person or persons connected with either the legislature, judicial or executive departments of the government of the United States, to whom, where, when and for what consideration in money or influence said stock was delivered, also as to what opinions, decisions and orders have been made by any officers connected with the government and by whom and all the circumstances connected therewith; also whether either telephone companies have in any manner improperly influenced or attempted to influence officers or officials by or through the public press.

After a brief, but excited debate, the resolution reported from the committee on rules were adopted.

A new swindling scheme is being worked by the fruit-tree men in Wabash county. Agents take a farmer's order for six or eight hundred dollars' worth of apricot trees, stating that the trees will bear in three years, when the tree men will take and pay for half the crop. The farmer in reality signs a negotiable note in return for trees, which cannot live in this climate.

The Corunna Headlight says: "The refusal of the United Brethren quarterly conference, held at Corunna, to pass upon the character of Rev. W. O. Butler, of Waterloo, being a member of the G. A. R., and as such conflicting with the discipline of the church, on the grounds of secret societies, has stirred up a lively hornet's nest within that fold. In this respect a certain portion of the United Brethren church membership are decidedly hidebound. It is only a question of time when the church will go upon the rocks in factional contentions over the secret society bugbear."

No pain remains where the affected part is rubbed with St. Jacobs Oil.

Benson's plaster is modern, scientific, prompt in action, safe, pleasant to wear, cleanly, and cures ailments in a few hours which no others are able even to relieve. What Becomes of the Trotters.

What becomes of the greater number of those horses that attract attention from time to time, only to disappear as suddenly as they came to notice, is a mystery to many who are interested in trotters. With the exception of the renowned trotters purchased and cared for by Mr. Robert Bonner, and the famous teams of Messrs. Vanderbilt and Work, and a few others, many disappear completely. Ninety horsemen out of 100, if asked their whereabouts, think for a few moments and then answer, "I don't know."

Mr. John D. Barry, keeper of the roadside inn at the Harlem bridge, where noted horsemen have rested their trotters and refreshed themselves for many years, scratched his head and pondered awhile before imparting information.

"Gentlemen sitting on the porch," he said, "often remark when a huckster or hackman drives past with a broken-down horse showing points of a trotter, 'that horse has a blood-like look; he was probably a good trotter in his day,' and then they wonder who drove him in his prime. The only one, it is said, they have identified is the old bay trotter Harry Feltler. He drags a couple from the elevated road to the track, and on race days the bony old fellow makes fast time to the Driving Park and back, carrying men who used to drive their own horses on the road."

Then Mr. Barry's memory turned to the old times. "Commodore Vanderbilt," he remarked, "drove Post Boy and Plough Boy as a bang-up team. He gave Capt. Jake's team, Johnny Bell and Rob Roy, before he died, and he left to William H. Vanderbilt his trotters, Small Hopes and Arthur Boy, another favorite roader, the name of which I forgot. I do not know what has become of them. Mr. William H. Vanderbilt takes excellent care of his trotters. He has driven Belvidere eight years, and Mantfred seven years, single and double. Considering his weight, 230 pounds, his horses last a long while. His pair step as lively and keep up their gait to-day with the best of them. The average life of a horse on the road is from seven to nine years, if properly handled. On the track they average from four to five years, if used with judgment."

He Preferred Death.

A funny anecdote connected with the Hon. Joe Blackburn's first race for Congress was told to me. Joe happened to be passing through Owenton, the county seat of Owen County, on the occasion of the hanging of a noted criminal. As a hanging is rather an exceptional episode in the State of Kentucky, the honorable Joe concluded he would stop over a few hours and witness the event. The gallows was erected in the public square, so that no citizen, however humble, should lose the opportunity of witnessing the unusual spectacle. It was, in fact, a gala day such as the history of Owenton has seldom recorded. The sheriff, with true Kentucky hospitality, invited Blackburn, as one of the distinguished guests present, to occupy a seat on the gallows. Blackburn did so. After the preliminaries had been arranged the sheriff consulted his watch and discovered it to be quite 12 o'clock, the hour fixed for the execution. Turning to the prisoner, he said:

"You have ten minutes yet to live. Is there anything you desire to say in the meantime?"

The prisoner sullenly replied there was not.

At this instant Blackburn sprang from his seat, and advancing to the edge of the scaffold, said:

"If the gentleman will allow me his remaining ten minutes I will be glad to announce myself a candidate for your suffrages. If elected to Congress—"

At this point the prisoner interjected: "Say, you! Is your name Joe Black burn?"

"Yes, sir," responded Blackburn, politely.

Turning to the sheriff, the prisoner said: "We won't stand on a few minutes more or less when the alternative is presented of death on one hand or listen to 'one of Joe Blackburn's long-winded speeches on the other. Flip the trap and let me go."

The good-natured sheriff obligingly "flipped the trap," and the next instant the desperado swung into eternity, while Blackburn clambered down the gallows, exclaiming as he went, that he had lost the greatest opportunity of his life.

Ancient Barbarism.

Egypt had millions of slaves, who were treated as cattle. She made dwarfs of little children by strapping them to boards, that no part of the body could grow except the head. Prisoners of war were often led along to bondage by wires passed through the tongue. Greeks possessed many forms of barbarity. Rome had its black spots. If a master was found murdered and the murderer could not be detected all his slaves were liable to be put to death. When Pedanius Secrectus killed all his 400 slaves were put to death, that the one guilty might thus be certainly reached. Many slaves were chained to the doors where they stood as porters; many were put in jail each night. Often infirm old slaves were exposed to perish upon an island in the Tiber. A Roman lady when offended at some dressing maid would thrust her dagger, like a hairpin, into the servant's face or body. Flamininus ordered a slave killed in order to gratify the scientific curiosity of some guest; Augustus crucified a slave for killing one of the King's quails. A master could sell a slave to be made combatant with wild beasts; Vedius Pollio, a Roman aristocrat, built a grand villa upon a mountain near Naples, and after having made it an earthly paradise so far as external beauty could compass such an end he named his home Paupiliump, a place where "cures should cease"; but this word did not extend its import to the slaves of his palace, for when any one committed an offense he was chopped up into food for the fishponds. Dying, he gave his home to Augustus, but Augustus demolished the house because it had been the scene of so many cruelties. Here were the taunts of Virgil; and all this belongs to what is called the golden age of Rome.

Of old war no pen can tell its needless horrors. To conquer was not enough. Generals measured their fame by the completeness of the desolation. Tacitus said of his own countrymen: "They make a solitude and call it peace." In some of the records of Hebrew history it was a matter of disgrace to a General in war to permit anything to live that belonged to the enemy. Little children formed a part of the common slaughter, and then the dumb brutes followed in the carnage. The sowing the ruins with salt expressed a wish that no grass or plant would survive the fury of the invader. This was an insane wrath.

When we read onward toward an epoch we find some mitigation of this horror, but our hearts ache still when we mark the brutal conduct of the Christians toward the Jews and toward each other. The inquisition, with its incredible tortures, was little else than a repetition on a small scale of the atrocities which the nations had once committed in the open day upon a colossal scale. It is little to be wondered at that on the confines of such a black past Colvin should have ordered the burning of Servetus; that Catherine de Medici should have cut off the heads of many wives; that Elizabeth should have stained her hands in blood while she was busy with the new literature of the new era of Shakespeare, Bacon, Spencer, and Sidney; that Catherine de Medici should have put to death 52,000 persons in a single night—the largest assassination upon record. Not very amazing, for large was the stream of learning which had flown down from Egypt and Arabia; large as was the stream of philosophy which had issued from the brains of Socrates and Plato; mighty as was the stream of the beneficial which rolled onward from Greece—the banks covered with flowers, yet equally broad and swift was the river of blood, its banks without any verdure, its current swollen by tears. This is that dismal, heart-sickening stream toward which an eye seldom turns, from whose memory the heart recoils—the Styx of our world, which flows black and sluggish nine times around human society as though to keep mercy's angels far away—a river one drink from whose waters makes, as in days of fable, the heart cold and dead for a year.—Prof. David Swain.

You ask, why? Because, my friend, the liver is a sluggish, lethargic organ that cannot be relieved of any ailment except by medicine which acts upon it in a quiet, steady manner, producing permanent effects, and assisting, not goading its normal action. The kidneys do the purifying. Always remember that! No other organ in the body can take their place in this respect, and they attend to over 9,000 hogsheads of blood in a year! Think of it and wonder that they are able to do so large an amount of work!

A healthy kidney to purify, and a healthy liver, emptying its poison into the bowels and not into the blood, are the true and only givers of pure blood.

The interior of the kidneys have few nerves of sensation, and a stone can be and often is present without any indications until it reaches the first outlet, which is supplied with nerves that soon sound the alarm.

Do you see the moral of this? A healthy liver and kidney is all there is in this question of pure blood. Keep them in order. Don't wait until they are diseased, for then it may be too late. Do this and you are bound to have pure blood. Warner's safe cure has a direct action upon both the kidneys and liver, and has become a recognized agent for its health-preserving and blood-purifying properties and as such is used by many physicians. A few bottles will positively prevent disease, and we are certain that disease of either organ is prevented by its use, if taken in time.

The spring approaches and nature needs help. Take it and save sickness and doctor's bills. Don't let any season go by without its use, or you may regret it forever.

THE ANCIENT GREEKS.

Their Belief Concerning the Seat of Love and Passion—The Liver Regarded as the Favored Organ—How Could It Be So? Recent Facts Partly Confirm This Belief.

The ancient Greeks thought the seat of love and passion was in the liver, and in great measure their opinion was not far astray. The lover whose liver is off, or the husband who is bilious, is not half a man—his sluggish liver has filled his blood with bile.

Of all the mean, contemptible counterfeits in the world, red blood full of bile is the worst—the very worst!

We have about 10 quarts of this fluid in the average size man. It is constantly undergoing change, and is manufactured from the food we consume, by a chemical process nature has. She selects only that portion which, after digestion, is found to be proper, and takes it up by a tube called the thoracic duct, emptying it into the large vein near the left collar bone, from which it is at once carried to the kidneys to be strained of all the deleterious matter which was left by the bowels.

If the kidneys are in healthy condition, the blood is in an absolutely pure state, contains all the elements for repairing waste, returns at once to the heart and is thrown by that organ to every part of the living body to give up its nourishment and take up all the worn out material.

Contrary to the general belief the liver is not a blood-purifying organ; its purpose is only for nutrition digestion and it secretes daily many pounds of bile, some being used in digestion and nutrition and the balance as a cathartic.

Now, after being housed up all winter, with meat largely composing the diet for the purpose of producing heat, the liver increases one-third of its supply of bile, and in the spring, nature not having use of the excess, it is thrown into the blood, carried to the skin (for it must be got rid of in some way) and causes that condition known as bilious when the person is dull, lethargic, restless, well to-day and half sick tomorrow; because the blood is loaded with this substance, which is just as foreign to it as so much dirt or corruption, and poisons the entire body, making your blood impure. You know there is something out of gear and the natural impulse is to take cathartics,—but drastic cathartics do not remove the cause—they make matters worse.

You ask, why? Because, my friend, the liver is a sluggish, lethargic organ that cannot be relieved of any ailment except by medicine which acts upon it in a quiet, steady manner, producing permanent effects, and assisting, not goading its normal action. The kidneys do the purifying. Always remember that! No other organ in the body can take their place in this respect, and they attend to over 9,000 hogsheads of blood in a year! The name of the old umbrella mender, killed on the Pittsburg road at Adams station, last Tuesday, is John Backer. He has no relatives, but has lived at Berne, Adams county, for a brief time. He was well known here and has many personal friends who will now recall him. He was born in Switzerland, in the canton of Berne.

The body of George Graham's first wife was found in a dry well at Brookline, Mo. Her form was naked and a gaping bullet hole was in her breast. An associated press telegram says that Graham will be lynched as soon as the body is identified and Mrs. Lee T. Brees and her husband are now en route to the scene.

Miss Charlotte Hanna, daughter of Mrs. Henry Hanna, died last night from a prolonged attack of consumption. Miss Hanna was twenty years of age, of most lovable disposition, and her life endeared her not alone to her relatives, but to a circle of friends whose sorrow is deep. It is so sad to see a person swept down in life's green spring, but memories of the warmest nature go with the dead girl.

The funeral will probably occur Sunday afternoon.

So large a per cent. of the Indianapolis business men are anxious to do the Wabash system, that they will be glad to know that one who is in position to understand the situation says that, without question, it will be cut loose from the Wabash system. The liabilities which the Wabash people, to secure the road, cannot evade paying, amount to $3,420,000, which is certainly more than the road is worth to the Wabash.

Mr. F. H. Bernard has returned from Indianapolis, where he attended a meeting of the Indiana republican committee. The election for state chairman was postponed for two weeks. In executive session some informal talk occurred as to the time for the state convention. On this point the drift of opinion showed a general desire for a date later than usual. The convention, in answer to this, may not occur until August or September. A basis of representation, however, was agreed upon. This gives one delegate to each 200 votes cast for Blaine, and one for the fraction over hundred, which will make the delegated strength of the body over twelve hundred.

HYMENEAL.

Marriage of Miss Dorothea Hartman and Mr. Charles Rose.

At the Lutheran church in Adams township, yesterday at 2:30, by Rev. Ferdinand Stock, occurred the marriage of Miss Dorothea, the accomplished daughter of County Commissioner Henry Hartman, and Mr. Charles Rose, of the firm of Hartman & Rose, the grocerymen on East Wayne street, this city, the bridesmaids being Misses Lizzie Horstmyer, Polly Hartman and Kate Hartman, Messrs. Fred Keil and Christ and Henry Rose acting as groomsmen. The bride was handsomely attired and looked very charming.

In the evening a reception was tendered the young people at the spacious farm mansion of Mr. Hartman, which was attended by numerous persons from this city, as well as the entire neighborhood of country folks, who partook bountifully of the county commissioner's sumptuous repast, after which music, dancing and games were the order, and lasted until the break of day.

Mr. and Mrs. Rose were the recipients of many handsome and costly presents.

On Monday next they will be "at home" to their legion of friends at No. 196 Ewing street, in this city, which the groom has already furnished. They set their bark to sail on the sea of matrimony under most favorable auspices, bearing with them the best wishes of innumerable friends that they may have a long, prosperous and happy voyage, in which they will wish THE SENTINEL most heartily joins.

A Most Disastrous Storm Sweeps over Baltimore, Pittsburg and New York City.

A BLIZZARD

Strikes New York and Is Likely to Prove Disastrous.

By Telegraph to THE SENTINEL:

New York, Feb. 26.—A western blizzard has reached New York. The mercury has fallen over twenty degrees in the past few hours, and the streets that were deluged with rain yesterday are covered with ice to-day. The wind is blowing a gale, and it is feared it will prove disastrous.

Travel on the elevated roads is greatly delayed. Signal service officers say the storm in point of velocity was the severest in fifteen years.

BUFFALO, Feb. 26.—One of the heaviest gales of the season set in last night and continued to-day. The wind reached a velocity of fifty-seven miles an hour. At 10 o'clock it moderated to forty an hour. The temperature is 4 degrees above zero. About 9 o'clock last night, while the wind was blowing a strong gale, a lady said to be a sister of the late Ex-governor Seymour, was blown from a Lake Shore train between Erie & Dunkirk. She attempted to pass from the dining car to the sleeper with her husband. No sooner had she stepped upon the platform than she was carried swiftly off of the train. The train backed nearly a mile before they found the lady who had escaped death, but received a deep gash over the left temple.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 26.—After a fearful rain-storm last night, Baltimore and vicinity was visited by a hurricane far severer than for several years. In the northwestern part of the city houses were unroofed, and in several instances not only tin was blown from the roofs, but sheathing was torn off and hurled entirely across the streets. The damage will be considerable. To-day the wind is still very high, with frequent gusts of snow.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 26.—The wind storm last night in the eastern part of this state blew down telegraph lines, and communication is almost entirely interrupted. The gale continued all night and was accompanied by a slight fall of snow. Within twenty-four hours the mercury fell 43 degrees.

TILDEN AT HOME.

His Palatial City and Country Residences.

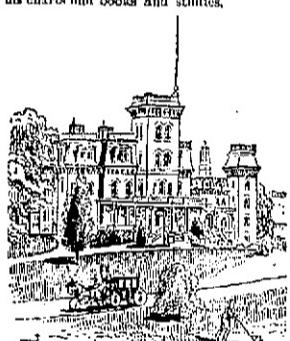

Greystone, the Country Seat in Which He Now Lives—His House at Gramercy Park, the Former Mecca for Politicians—Tilden's Tastes and Studies.

Special Correspondence.

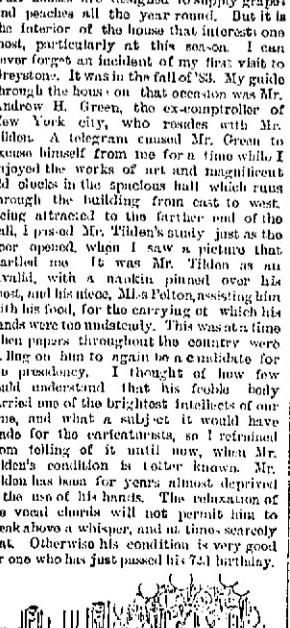

New York, Feb. 26.—If the political history of the past quarter of a century could be faithfully and impartially written, if due credit were given to those who have been leaders of public thought, guides of public opinion, it would be found that the "Sage of Greystone," the quiet and unostentatious Samuel J. Tilden, though a frail little man, has been a giant among the movers of men and events. But an acknowledgment of his public services cannot be made in his day nor likely in his generation, if they are ever made. The partisanship of his political opponents and the jealousies of members of his own party will prevent it.

These are thoughts that would occur to an unprejudiced observer after visiting Greystone and seeing Mr. Tilden among his charts and books and studies.

GREYSTONE.

Mr. Tilden's country home at Greystone is situated on the east bank of the Hudson, about eighteen miles from the New York city hall, and in one of the first among the beautiful homes of America. It was built by John T. Warling, a Massachusetts lumber manufacturer, who made his money, it is said, by using convict labor. The building and farm of about 100 acres cost him $460,000. Mr. Tilden bought it in 1870 and has since been constantly at work improving it. Every day that is not stormy he can be seen inspecting the various portions of his "farm" as he calls it, and it is a farm and an exceedingly well regulated one, the stock being the very best procurable. The greenhouses and grapery, erected during this year, are at present taking much of Mr. Tilden's attention. His purpose is to rival Mr. Gould in his collection of plants, and his fruit houses are designed to supply grapes and peaches all the year round. But it is the interior of the house that interests one most, particularly at this season. I can never forget an incident of my visit to Greystone. It was in the fall of '83. My guide through the house on that occasion was Mr. Andrew H. Green, the ex-controller of New York city, who resides with Mr. Tilden. A telegram caused Mr. Green to excuse himself from me for a time while I enjoyed the works of art and magnificent old oaks in the spacious hall which runs through the building from east to west. Being attracted to the farther end of the hall, I passed Mr. Tilden's study just as the door opened, when I saw a picture that startled me. It was Mr. Tilden as an invalid, with a napkin pinned over his chest, and his niece, Miss Polton, assisting him with his food, for the carrying of which his hands were too weak. This was at a time when papers throughout the country were calling on him to again be a candidate for the presidency. I thought of how few could understand that his feeble body carried one of the brightest intellects of our time, and what subject it would have made for the caricaturists, so I refrained from telling of it until now, when Mr. Tilden's condition is better known. Mr. Tilden has been for years almost deprived of the use of his hands. The relaxation of his fleshless will not permit him to speak above a whisper, and at times scarcely that. Otherwise his condition is very good for one who has just passed his 73rd birthday.

MR. TILDEN IN HIS STUDY.

Few students devote as much time to their books as Mr. Tilden, and fewer possess in such a remarkable way, the faculty of grasping, analyzing and retaining all they read. I took a hasty glance at the numerous books which were conveniently arranged on his study table. They all appeared to be either the memoirs of statesmen or pertained to statesmanship or economic subjects in some way. At every turn in the house are cases of bugs, each devoted to some special subject. Through the services of his amanuensis and two valets he is enabled to bring to hand immediately any work he desires to refer to. Often he will send a special messenger to his city house in Gramercy park for a book to assist him in his investigations. Like the great general he is, he has a room devoted to topography, where maps and charts of the whole world are kept for reference. The house throughout is furnished with every convenience that excellent taste could suggest, from a steam engine in the cellar to the powerful telescope in the upper chamber of the tower. The northern wing of the building is devoted, with the exception of a spacious billiard room, to the dozen servants and the culinary department. The walls of the house are hung with works of art of the choicest kind, prominent among which are excellent reproductions of the treasures of the Vatican. Above the parlor, music and reception rooms at the south side of the building are Mr. Tilden's apartments. The remainder of the house has accommodations for probably twenty-five guests. The house and grounds are constantly open to visitors. His guests number many of the most prominent public men of the country.

This is the house that was the Mecca for politicians until a few years ago. Hero campaigns were planned, lines of policy discussed, and reconciliations between rival candidates and organizations effected. The house has recently been rebuilt. It is fitted out even more sumptuously than Greystone. Here is Mr. Tilden's great law library. It, together with his other books occupy five large rooms in an absolutely disengaged portion of the building. When Mr. Tilden lives these houses shall continue to be the resort for the leaders of the party whose

SELLING HORSES.

How it is Done in the Great City of London.

But up and down goes a horse, walking, or rather dancing, upon his hind legs; the buildings go on; a knowing-looking dealer plunges under the rails and makes a hasty survey of the animal's mouth in spite of its evident objection to the process. To the outside spectator there is always a degree of mystery about the auctioneer. How does he pick up the bids that are conveyed by a wink, perhaps, or an imperceptible movement of the chin—by name, sign, anyhow, which the keenest attention of the observer fails to detect? But young Mr. Richard Tattonall seems to take to it all as naturally as possible. The greatest of the auctioneers rarely indulge in eloquence. A country practitioner will expound as much fire about an old frying-pun as Tattonall would about a 2,000-quidnunc yearling, but there is a manner that is more eloquent than words, and there is a kind of generalship in the business that comes out on great occasions. But here everything is sharp and decisive; the hammer comes down sharply upon the last bid. "Another turn," to the groom, who hangs on to the halter and flies up and down the track, while bystanders recede gracefully from the horse's heels. "A hundred and fifty—fifty-five—to be sold; and sixty against you—sixty-five—any advance—going." Bang! And, by this time, an other animal is prancing along towards the rostrum, when the process of extracting the last bid and knocking down, metaphorically, the horse, is gone through with the same expedition. Meantime, from the gallery above, the number of the lots had been shown on a large planchet, dealers mark off the pieces with stubby pencils, and amateurs criticize the appearance and action of the animal under the hammer. And thus the sale goes on hour after hour, and before nightfall some 15,000 or 20,000 pounds worth of horseflesh will have changed owners, and to-morrow they will march away in strings to their new quarters—some back to the shires, to summer pastures and lightsome frolics, others to carry youth and beauty in the parks, others again as coach horses to trundle stately old dowagers hither and thither, while here and there one—a good fellow and fast—having seen its best day, will be consigned to the shafts of a carriage and so end its career upon the arid stones of this London wilderness.—All the Year Round.

Mr. Morrison, from the committee on rules, reported a substitute for Messrs. Hauback and Pulitzer's resolutions directing inquiry into the Pan-Electrical telephone matter. It provides for a select committee to make inquiry into any expenditure on the part of the government incurred relative to the rights of the Bell and Pan-Electrical telephone companies to property of their patents to include all organizations and companies that have sprung out of the Pan-Electrical telephone company, and also make full inquiry as to the issuance of stock known as the Pan-Electrical telephone stock, or any stock of any other company, companies or organizations springing out of the Pan-Electrical Telephone company to any person or persons connected with either the legislature, judicial or executive departments of the government of the United States, to whom, where, when and for what consideration in money or influence said stock was delivered, also as to what opinions, decisions and orders have been made by any officers connected with the government and by whom and all the circumstances connected therewith; also whether either telephone companies have in any manner improperly influenced or attempted to influence officers or officials by or through the public press.

After a brief, but excited debate, the resolutions reported from the committee on rules were adopted.

The circumstances of his death are poorly melancholy. Our readers know already that he fell dead with a bullet in his head, a ball fired by hands ostensibly friendly. Geromino was run down at last in Mexico, 200 miles south of the New Mexico border. The spot was in the mountains of western Mexico, in Chihuahua country, very near the 10th meridian of west longitude. Mexican soldiers were pursuing the red enemy, too. He was accustomed, after committing depredations, in one country to flee over the border into the other. Capt. Crawford had numbers of Indian scouts with him. It is claimed that the Mexicans mistook these for friends and fired on them. An attempt was made to signal the Mexicans and bring them to a parley, but before this could be done another volley was fired, and the dashing, untiring Indian fighter fell

Ancient Barbarisms.

Egypt had millions of slaves, who were treated as cattle. She made dwarfs of little children by strapping them to boards, that no part of the body could grow except the head. Prisoners of war were often led along to bondage by wires passed through the tongue. Greece possessed many forms of barbarity. Rome had its black spots. If a master was found murdered and the murderer could not be detected all his slaves were liable to be put to death. When Pedanius was secretly killed all his 400 slaves were put to death, that the one guilty might thus be certainly reached. Many slaves were chained to the doors where they stood as porters; many were put in jail each night. Often infirm old slaves were exposed to perish upon an island in the Tiber. A Roman lady when offended at some dressing maid would thrust her dagger, like a hairpin, into the servant's face or body. Flaminius ordered a slave killed in order to gratify the scientific curiosity of some guest; Augustus crucified a slave for killing one of the King's quails. A master could sell a slave to be made combatant with wild beasts; Vedius Pollio, a Roman aristocrat, built a grand villa upon a mountain near Naples, and after having made it an earthly paradise so far as external beauty could compass such an end he named his home Pauplyum, a place where "care should cease," but this word did not extend its import to the slaves of his palace, for when any one committed an offense he was chopped up into food for the fishponds. Dying, he gave his home to Augustus, but Augustus demolished the house because it had been the scene of so many cruelties. Here were the taunts of Virgil; and all this belongs to what is called the golden age of Rome.

Old war was no pen to tell its needless horrors. To conquer was not enough. Generals measured their fame by the completeness of the desolation. Tacitus said of his own countrymen: "They make a solitude and call it peace." In some of the records of Hebrew history it was a matter of disgrace to a General in war to permit anything to live that belonged to the enemy. Little children formed a part of the common slaughter, and then the dumb brutes followed in the carnage. The sowing the ruins with salt expressed a wish that no grass or plant would survive the fury of the invader. 'Twas an insane wish.

When we read onward toward an epoch we find some mitigation of this horror, but our hearts ache still when we mark the brutal conduct of the Christians toward the Jews and toward each other. The inquisition, with its incredible tortures, was little else than a repetition on a small scale of the atrocities which the nations had once committed in the open day upon a colossal scale. It is little to be wondered at that on the coulisses of such a black past Colvin should have ordered the burning of Servetus; that Henry VIII. should have cut off the heads of many wives; that Elizabeth should have stained her hands in blood while she was busy with the new literature of the new era of Shakespeare, Bacon, Spencer, and Sidney; that Catherine de Medici should have put to death 52,000 persons in a single night—the largest assassination upon record. Not very amazing, for large as was the stream of learning which had flown down from Egypt and Arabia; large as was the stream of philosophy which had issued from the brains of Socrates and Plato; mighty as was the stream of the beautiful which rolled onward from Greece—the banks covered with flowers, yet equally broad and swift was the river of blood, its banks without any verdure, its current swollen by tears. This is that dismal, heart-sickening stream toward which we seldom turn, from whose memory the heart recoils—the Styx of our world, which flows black and sluggish nine times around human sin, as though to keep merey's angels far away—a river one drink from whose waters makes, as in days of fable, the heart cold and dead for a year.—Prof. David Swing.

The Root of the Evil.

To thoroughly cure scrofula it is necessary to strike directly at the root of the evil. This is exactly what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, by acting upon the blood, thoroughly cleansing it of all impurities, and leaving not even a taint of scrofula in the vital fluid. Thousands who have been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, testify to its wonderful blood purifying qualities. Sold by all druggists.

THE ANCIENT GREEKS.

Their Belief Concerning the Seat of Love and Passion—The Liver Regarded as the Favored Organ—How Could It Be So? Recent Facts Partly Confirm This Belief.

The ancient Greeks thought the seat of love and passion was in the liver, and in great measure their opinion was not far astray. The lover whose liver is off, or the husband who is bilious, is not half a man—his sluggish liver has filled his blood with bile.

Of all the mean, contemptible counterfeits in the world, red blood full of bile is the worst—the very worst!

We have about 10 quarts of this fluid in the average size man. It is constantly undergoing change, and is manufactured from the food we consume, by a chemical process nature has. She selects only that portion which, after digestion, is found to be proper, and takes it up by a tube called the thoracic duct, emptying it into the large vein near the left collar bone, from which it is at once carried to the kidneys to be strained of all the deleterious matter which was left by the bowels.

If the kidneys are in healthy condition, the blood is in an absolutely pure state, contains all the elements for repairing waste, returns at once to the heart and is thrown by that organ to every part of the living body to give up its nourishment and take up all the worn out material.

Contrary to the general belief the liver is not a blood-purifying organ; its purpose is only for nutrition digestion and it secretes daily many pounds of bile, some being used in digestion and nutrition and the balance as a cathartic.

Now, after being housed up all winter, with meat largely composing the diet for the purpose of producing heat, the liver increases one-third of its supply of bile, and in the spring, nature not having use of the excess, it is thrown into the blood, carried to the skin (for it must be got rid of in some way) and causes that condition known as bilious when the person is dull, lethargic, restless, well-to-do and half sick tomorrow; because the blood is loaded with this substance, which is just as foreign to it as so much dirt or corruption, and poisons the entire body, making your blood impure. You know there is something out of gear and the natural impulse is to take cathartics, but drastic cathartics do not remove the cause—they make matters worse.

You ask, why? Because, my friend, the liver is a sluggish, lethargic organ that cannot be relieved of any ailment except by medicine which acts upon it in a quiet, steady manner, producing permanent effects, and assisting, not goading its normal action. The kidneys do the purifying. Always remember that! No other organ in the body can take their place in this respect, and they attend to over 9,000 ligaments of blood in a year! Think of it and wonder that they are able to do so large an amount of work!

A healthy kidney to purify, and a healthy liver, emptying its poison into the bowels and not into the blood, are the true and only givers of pure blood.

The interior of the kidneys have few nerves of sensation, and a stone can be and often is present without any indications until it reaches the first outlet, which is supplied with nerves that soon sound the alarm.

Do you see the moral of this? A healthy liver and kidney is all there is in this question of pure blood. Keep them in order. Don't wait until they are diseased, for then it may be too late. Do this and you are bound to have pure blood.

The spring approaches and nature needs help. Take it and save sickness and doctor's bills. Don't let any season go by without its use, or you may regret it forever.

A Cincinnati firm bought 120 walnut trees growing on the Burntner farm, near Delphi, at auction for $6,000. There were bidders from several states.

So large a per cent. of the Indianapolis business men are anxious that the Indianapolis, Penn & Chicago road should again be made a local road to Indianapolis, that they will be glad to know that one who is in position to understand the situation says that, without question, it will be cut loose from the Wabash system. The liabilities which the Wabash people, to secure the road, cannot evade paying, amount to $3,420,000, which is certainly more than the road is worth to the Wabash.

Mr. F. H. Bernard has returned from Indianapolis, where he attended a meeting of the Indiana republican committee. The election for state chairman was postponed for two weeks. In executive session some informal talk occurred as to the time for the state convention. On this point the drift of opinion showed a general desire for a date later than usual. The convention, in answer to this, may not occur until August or September. A basis of representation, however, was agreed upon. This gives one delegate to each 200 votes cast for Blaine, and one for the fraction over a hundred, which will make the delegated strength of the body over twelve hundred.
